

04 THE LANDING PAGE — LAYOUT & COPY PLAN

Wireframe sketch for bramsfruit.com/get-your-hands-dirty. Each section maps to a part of the journey she's already in. The page never asks her to do more than one thing at a time.

B*tch, come get your hands dirty

A seasonal Bram's Fruit farming experience and Farmer Line for women who want to leave the feed, enter the field and feel something real again.

B · IDEA

From the feed to the field.

You spend enough time scrolling and wanting to slow down. Get Your Hands Dirty is Bram's Fruit's invitation to do something physical again — plant seeds, tend a shared plot, harvest what grows and sit down for a long-table dinner with the women who grew it with you. Not a wellness retreat. Not a content moment. Soil, food, weather, conversation and dirt under your nails.

D · LINE

FARMER LINE SHOT

Clothing made to get dirty.

The Farmer Line is a small Bram's Fruit capsule combining streetwear with farming utility. Oversized shirts, denim, boots, aprons — built to move between Amsterdam, the market, the garden and the field.

E · HER

FOR THE ALWAYS-ON CREATIVE WOMAN.

For women who love beautiful things, good food, city life and slow rituals, but are tired of everything becoming content. For women who want to do something with their hands again. Come alone, bring a friend, or meet one there.

I WANT IN

A · HERO

One image, one slogan, one primary action ("Reserve your spot"). The secondary ghost button gives her a softer entry if she's not ready to commit. No three-button pile-up — the page never competes with itself.

B · THE IDEA

The reframing paragraph. Names what this is — and just as importantly, what it isn't. "Not a wellness retreat, not a content moment" earns trust by refusing the category clichés she's tired of.

C · THE FIVE STEPS

Plant · Tend · Harvest · Eat · Wear. The same module appears in Carousel 2, the table layout, and the Harvest Journal emails, so the campaign reads as one connected system across every channel.

D · THE FARMER LINE

Product without selling. The clothing is framed as equipment for the experience she already wants. Preview, not "shop now" — the experience CTA stays primary.

E · WHO IT'S FOR

The mirror moment. She reads this paragraph and recognises herself — "tired of everything becoming content." Identification, not persuasion. This is where conversion really happens.

F · PRACTICAL INFO

Friction removal. The four cards answer the questions that stop her clicking: where, when, how big, what to bring.

G · THE ROUTE

The page links back to the physical campaign. A mini map of the six stops keeps the bike wagon visible online — same "from the feed to the field" loop, on the page itself.

H · THE ASK — THREE LEVELS

Reserve a spot (high intent) · Follow the wagon (find it in the city) · Harvest Journal (low-friction email). Lets her commit at her own depth instead of one all-or-nothing CTA.

I · EMOTIONAL CLOSE

One last slogan, one last button. The primary CTA reappears with a softer label ("I want in"). The campaign line carries her over the line.

PAGE PRINCIPLES

- One ask repeated — never competing CTAs
- Speaks the same visual language as the street & the feed
- Skimmable: she gets it before she scrolls past it
- Phone explains, never replaces the experience
